

A native plant is one which occurred within the state before settlement by Europeans. The species on this list are native plants suggested for landscaping in Pennsylvania. They have been selected because they tend to grow widely throughout the state; they are common and will likely do well if matched to their preferred growing conditions. None of these plants are rare, endangered, threatened or extinct in the state. The Department of Conservation & Natural Resources advises not to remove native plants from the wild, but instead purchase from a garden center. The following is a list of recommended native plants that are most common in this area. Although we stock a wide variety of native plants, we do not carry everything on this list.
